

Executive Learning Always Lagging Behind

When we hire senior executives for clients one of the things we look for from candidates is their attitude towards learning. Continuous learning can equip people with new knowledge and new perspectives leading to new insights, allowing them to bring businesses to new levels. It is an attitude to always look for improvement and advancement.

From the corporate perspective, research shows that Executive Learning is currently one of the poorest areas companies equip themselves in meeting transformation and business challenges. Executives are always too busy to learn new things and they are usually assumed to be always all-rounded, updated and knowledgeable.

The current business environment commands a much wider spectrum of awareness and different sets of executive skills, some of which may not even be readily available from external hires.

Companies should play a more active role in facilitating executive learning. Executive learning programs should be consciously implemented with defined objectives and measurement metrics.
